Top caravan makers adopt Kojack

Leading Australian caravan manufacturers are switching to the Kojack hydraulic jack from Purple Line as their original equipment jack.

Supreme and Paramount head a growing list of top brands to adopt the high-lifting Kojack with its two-stage hydraulic action and four-tonne capacity.

Purple Line Australia director Malcolm Hill said manufacturers favoured Kojack for its performance, ease of use and neat storage in its own carry bag.

“Kojack ticks all the boxes, including compliance with Australian Standard AS/NZS 2693, required by the Caravan Industry Association of Australia for RVMAP Accreditation,” he said.

“Other top names that have adopted Kojack include Goldstream, Elite and Opal – and Jayco, which specifies Kojack for its fifth-wheelers.”

Supreme Caravans general manager David Martin said his customers were very happy with Kojack, which Supreme adopted just over a year ago.

“Kojack is easy to use, easy to store, reliable and good-looking, very much in keeping with the reputation for quality which Supreme has earned over almost 30 years.

Supreme Caravans general manager David Martin says the high-lift hydraulic Kojack has proved a winner with Supreme customers.

Kojack comes with interchangeable ball-mount and block fittings and a 100mm extension for high-riding vans.

“Of course we hope our customers don’t often need to use their jack, but those who have used the Kojack have all been very pleased with it.”

Kojack has a 220mm lifting range plus a 100mm extension and interchangeable ball-mount and block fittings to suit most popular Australian caravans and camper trailers.
